#7

TypingGuru App

GET IT ON Google Play

Easy

Environment and nature play a vital role in the survival and development of all living beings on earth because clean air pure water fertile soil and green plants are essential for life every person should understand that protecting the environment is not only the responsibility of governments but also of each individual human being the forests provide oxygen absorb carbon dioxide and prevent soil erosion rivers and lakes give fresh water to humans animals and plants the mountains control the climate and protect biodiversity pollution deforestation and excessive use of natural resources are the major threats to our environment if we cut down trees without planting new ones the balance of nature will be disturbed and climate change will increase cities are becoming hotter because trees are being removed and concrete buildings are increasing global warming is another serious problem caused by the emission of harmful gases from vehicles industries and factories protecting the environment means reducing waste recycling materials planting trees using public transport and avoiding unnecessary burning of fossil fuels schools and colleges also teach students about the importance of nature because children who understand these values from an early age grow up to be responsible citizens wild animals and birds also depend on forests rivers and grasslands for survival when humans destroy these habitats many species become endangered or extinct every small action counts for example if every person saves water uses electricity wisely and avoids plastic pollution the earth will remain clean and healthy for future generations governments around the world are creating laws to protect natural resources but the cooperation of society is equally important people should also be aware of climate change and take steps to reduce carbon footprints by walking cycling using solar energy and planting more trees parks gardens and green belts in cities also help in maintaining the ecological balance and provide a place for recreation and relaxation spending time in nature improves mental health reduces stress and increases creativity in conclusion environment and nature are priceless gifts for humans and all living beings if we respect and protect them we can enjoy a healthy happy life if